DEAL IN SPEECH
AT COLUMBUSContrasts "Mumbo Jumbo"
Rally With Conclave
in ClevelandCITES LONDON FITNESSContrasts Landon Platform of American Doctrines With Roosevelt's "Springboard"

COLUMBUS, O., July 2—John D. Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee and campaign manager for Governor Alfred M. Landon, Republican nominee for President, presented a dramatic contrast here last night between the platforms adopted by the Cleveland and the Philadelphia conventions.

In his first address since the Democratic gathering in the Quaker City, Hamilton told the Ohio State Republican convention the platform on which Landon stands was drafted by serious citizens and reflects great "American doctrines."

He characterized the platform of President Roosevelt as a "springboard," written in Washington and adopted by "rubber-stamps" at Philadelphia and assailed it as an effort "chiefly to hypnotize the voters."

The speaker's characterization of Landon as the representative of the great body of workers in all fields of national endeavor brought a great outburst of cheering in the convention.

Hamilton said:

"It appears a Presidential campaign is under way. The Republican Party has adopted a platform and nominated its candidates, and what Mr. Roosevelt has left of the Democratic Party has necessarily done the same."

"If the Republican convention had also been composed almost exclusively of professional politicians—job holders of Government and party;

"If the order of business in Cleveland had consisted also of Mummies' parades, vaudeville skits and bathing beauty contests;

"If the Republican delegates had also acted as mere rubber stamps;

"If the Republican platform had also been nothing but oratorical evasion;

"And if the candidates nominated to head the Republican Party had also been noted less for their integrity, ability and desire to serve than for a record of broken contracts, vacillating policies and eagerness to rule;

"If, in short, the picture of the Republican convention had been a duplicate of the convention which just closed in Philadelphia;

"Then, indeed, America might despair of restoring orderly and intelligent government through the traditional process of a free election."

"But there was no high-powered fantasy, no elaborate build-up, no artificial theatrics about the Cleveland convention. When men gather in high seriousness, determined to reaffirm the principles of representative government in a nation in which these principles have for three and one-half years been flouted and betrayed, no mumbo-jumbo such as this is needed."

"The results of that meeting in Cleveland took Mr. Roosevelt and his advisors by surprise and the intemperate language of their subsequent statements and speeches has given proof of their alarm."

"United in determination and in principle, the party united also on its platform. And that platform presents a political philosophy not of one man, not of one group, but of the whole party and of that great body of citizens who, without regard to party label, are daily, in increasing numbers, accepting it as a statement of American doctrine."

"The platform is of common authorship. It lacks, therefore, tricks of eloquence. It does not use language to obscure thought. In it the principles of the party are stated, not implied. It is direct and specific."

"When it proposes benefits, as in the social security plank, it frankly admits the necessity of a tax to support them. It does not seek to hide that necessity by some financial sleight of hand."

"On such subjects as monopoly and the civil service, it is so outspoken that Mr. Roosevelt, faced with this frank-

LEGION JUNIORS WIN
COUNTY CHAMPIONSHIPBristol Nine Defeats Morrisville, 9 to 2, for Eighth Consecutive VictoryGRIMES ON THE MOUND

The Bristol Junior American Legion nine won the Bucks County championship yesterday by virtue of their easy 9-2 victory over Morrisville on Leedom's field. The victory was the locals' eighth consecutive victory in League competition which explains the championship.

Quakertown was the only team to defeat Bristol when they upset the new champs 9-5 at Landreth's field on June 6. Although this game definitely won the championship, it was the locals' 1-0 victory over Perkasie last Tuesday that actually decided the championship.

Manager Hems selected Hystie Grimes for mound duty and the diminutive Third Warden turned in a fine game in turning back the visitors with only five hits while fanning ten opposing batters. He did not walk one batter. At the same time Hystie slammed out a triple and had two walks to aid his own cause. The real leader in the Bristol attack, however, was Jesse Van Zant, who had three hits in three official trips to the plate and had a sacrifice. Stanley Dick and Pat McGahan each contributed two hits to the local cause, while Roberts led the visitors at bat with two hits.

Morrisville took a one run lead with a counter in the third on Roberts' first hit mixed with two errors.

Hems' boys were shut-out with 3 hits up until the 4th when the locals let lose a barrage of hits together with a sacrifice, a hit batter and a base on balls to score five runs and to take a lead never to be headed thereafter.

Stanley Dick opened with a single to left; McGahan followed with a hit to the same garden and Van Zant sent them along one base with a sacrifice. Hal Ruhl came through in the pinch with a single to center, scoring both Dick and McGahan. Ruhl went to second on a passed ball from where he scored on Dougherty's single to center. VanLenten was hit with a pitched ball and Grimes walked to lead the bases. Dougherty scored as Kalenki was tossed out. Gallagher beat out an infield hit to score VanLenten. Dick ended the inning by fanning.

A single by McGahan, his steal of second, a wild pitch and VanZant's single coupled with two errors by Wallace scored two more local tallies.

Two more unnecessary runs were tabulated for Bristol in the sixth. Dick singled with one down, stole second, moved to third as McGahan was thrown out and scored on VanZant's third hit of the game. Jesse took third on Tomlinson's single to center and scored as the latter was run down between first and second.

Morrisville introduced three pinch hitters to stir up a rally in an effort to pull the game out of fire. Two of these pinch batsmen produced hits, however, in the futile rally that netted the visitors their final run in the 7th. In this inning Morrisville made three of their five hits. After Reitzle fanned, Morris, batting for Wilson, singled to left to start the rally. Wilmot, batting for Foster, followed with a single to center. Higgins, the third pinch hitter of the inning batted for Gorman and struck out. Roberts then connected for his second hit, scoring Morris. Nowallinski grounded out, Dick to Gallagher, to end the game.

Grimes was the winning hurler while Anderson was the visitors' twirler who took the pasting handed by the ultimate winners.

The new champs dethroned Perkasie—last year's champs, who, incidentally, went quite far in the state play-offs for national honors.

Bristol's opponents have as yet not been selected due to the closeness in other county races in which the champion is not yet crowned. However, it is expected Bristol will play the win-

Low water ..... 8.10 a. m., 8.21 p. m.COST BUCKS COUNTIANS $5,760,000

Operation of the Federal government under Franklin D. Roosevelt cost the people of Bucks county $5,760,000.00 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936.

It cost the people of Pennsylvania $576,000,000.00 and the people of the entire United States $7,768,000,000.00. This represents a cost of 60 dollars for every man, woman and child in the country and the recently distributed soldiers' bonus is not included in any figures.

"And next year," says Senator Harry F. Byrd, Democrat, Virginia, "the figures will be increased by many millions of dollars."

"I along with nearly every other citizen," Senator Byrd adds, "believed that with improving conditions these colossal expenses would be reduced."

The cost of operating the Federal government during the next fiscal year will be increased by at least $600,000,000.00, according to the figures of the administration's own Budget Director.

"The inevitable end of this reckless spending of public funds is greater debt, higher taxes and a weakened financial structure," M. Harvey Taylor, Republican State Chairman, pointed out in Harrisburg today.

"When it is considered that President Roosevelt promised rigid economy back in October, 1932, the actual facts as revealed by Senator Byrd, a member of the President's own political party, seem incredible," Chairman Taylor added.

The 60-dollar per capita cost of operating the government for the year ending June 30, 1936, is based on a population of 125,000,000 men, women and children. On this basis, the cost to the 96,000 persons in Bucks county was $5,760,000.00.

Cost to the 172,000 persons in Lehigh county was $10,320,000.00 and to the 169,000 persons in Northampton county was $10,140,000.00.

Operating the Roosevelt administration during the year ending June 30, 1936, cost the 265,000 men, women and children in Montgomery county $15,900,000.00.

CANAL OPENING TO BE FORCED BY THE STATECompany Told to Either Open

MORRISVILLE, July 2—A decision was reached at a hearing before the Public Service Commission in Philadelphia to postpone proceedings looking to the removal of the canal bridge on West Bridge street, and the widening of the roadway between Pennsylvania avenue and Lafayette street. The decision resulted because of more litigation over the jurisdiction of the Lehigh Canal.

The Morrisville borough solicitor, Willard S. Curtin, and Mayor Thomas B. Stockham, had been named by the commission to ascertain from the property owners between the canal and Pennsylvania avenue what the property damages would be. Solicitor Curtin at the hearing yesterday said that these would reach $19,300. Curtin also advised the commission that Morrisville Council had gone on record not to pay any property damages except the cost of relaying the sidewalks and curbs in the event this improvement was carried out.

Proposed plans as presented by the highway department call for the lowering of the bridge about eight feet and since this will leave an elevation in front of some of the properties, members of Common Council have expressed themselves as not willing to go along on this plan. Local officials want the span removed entirely and the street built on a grade level with the remainder of Bridge street.

At the hearing it was announced that the Commonwealth, through the attorney general, has notified the canal company either to open up the canal as a waterway or the State will consider the canal abandoned and take it over in its entirety.

By Gov't at Morrisville

MORRISVILLE, July 2—This borough is to have a Government-owned post office building, according to an announcement received from Washington.

Bids for a site are now being advertised for and will be opened on July 13th.

At different times efforts were made to have the Government erect a post office building here, but because the receipts of the office were less than $20,000 annually, the matter never got very far.

Postmaster George Burgner has been pushing the project since he assumed office.

The plot the Government is asking for calls for a lot 120 feet by 170 feet.

GERMAN PEOPLE DO ALL
"FOR LOVE OF HITLER"Dr. C. S. Hollander, Returning From Europe, Tells of The Germans' AdvancementALL TYPES OF UNIFORMS

"Do it for the love of Hitler," says the German government. And the German people do it, because they love Hitler!

Thus speaks Dr. Charles S. Hollander, head of the Bristol plant of the Rohm and Haas Company. Dr. and Mrs. Hollander have just returned from a trip to Europe, where they spent most of their time in Germany.

"The Germans are happy and content in their life under Hitler," continued the traveller. "There is no internal discord and no party haggling; no discussion of domestic politics and no press freedom, and the Germans like it!"

"It is estimated that Hitler has reduced the unemployment in Germany from 7,000,000 to 2,000,000 and this is bound to please the people. There are no beggars on the streets and the cities are immaculately clean. Improvements in the public utilities are under construction all the time, and this, too, pleases the people."

"Hitler has accomplished all this by creating places for the jobless in his many armies. He has discouraged women working unless they can prove they have someone dependent on them; therefore these women who have had to give their jobs to men are not jobless, they just aren't working."

"I was struck most by the large number of uniforms I saw. Of course this was Hitler's way of making jobs for the unemployed. There were the Brown Shirts, who had been jobless but who were then holding half-political jobs. The Black Shirts are the elite of the police force. Then there are city police, country police, forest police, and almost every other kind, and they all wear 'spiffy' uniforms."

"The German youth, who adore Hitler so completely, are in uniforms, too. The school boys wear brown shirts and knee breeches, and the girls are seen in dark blue skirts, white blouses, brown jackets, and they wear their hair in long braids hanging over their shoulders. All the youth have compulsory 'work service' to perform for six months without pay before they can enter any position or go to a university. This plan of working together has done a great deal toward stopping the class prejudice which is so prevalent in Europe."

"Hitler took the men from the streets and put them in the 'working corps.' This work takes the form of the public services, and they really have improved the living conditions of Germany immensely. They have built

Rescue Workers in Flood Area

Austin, Texas, July 2—Rescue workers rushed into Southern Texas today, and sent back reports of a death toll already listed at twenty, innumerable persons missing, hundreds injured and property and crop damage of millions of dollars, as rolling flood waters continued wreaking havoc over large areas.

Streams swollen by two days of heavy rain were fed by new downpours last night. Terrifying reports of entire families desperately clinging to the wreckage of their homes, swept away by the roaring murky water.

At Kyle, the usually placid Plum Creek was a veritable torrent. Many lives were reported lost there. A freight train plunged into the swollen creek, wrecked when a flood-weakened trestle collapsed. Two bodies have been removed from the train wreck.

Six deaths were reported at Umland and one at Buda. Rescuers found boats of little aid, and unable to make headway against the roaring current.

Shamokin, July 2—Entombed for almost 24 hours in a bootleg coal hole, Enoch Kulshinski, Jr., 35-year-old anthracite miner, was rescued shortly after 8 a. m. today.

Rescue workers who had toiled all night removing earth and rock from the gangway niche in which Kulshinski was trapped by a cave-in, carried the half-hysterical miner to the surface. He was rushed to Shamokin State Hospital, his condition uncertain. Hospital attaches could not say immediately whether Kulshinski had been badly injured by the crushing weight of stone and debris, which fell on him and his father, Enoch, Sr. The older Kulshinski was rescued a short time after the fall.

Before doctors took time to examine Kulshinski for broken bones or other injuries, oxygen was administered to the semi-conscious victim.

Hospital attendants said he was in a serious condition from shock and exhaustion, his weakened condition necessitating oxygen.

PARTY AS A MAGNET

Party has a tremendous hold on the loyalty of men even if they have not been high in its councils. Many, thoroughly disappointed with a party leader, prefer to work from within—like Senator Carter Glass—hide their time and seek to turn the party back to a leadership more in conformity with their ideas.

When then five conspicuous Democrats in the face of the certainty that Roosevelt would be re-nominated put forward such a last appeal as Messrs. Smith, Ely, Reed, Colby and Cohan did, the reason is deeper than personal motives or disappointment.

Men have changed their political opinions rapidly in the last few years, but this is a definite break after long years of party service under many different types of leadership. Their statement may not have been the strongest possible, and yet it tells the story. Roosevelt taxation, Roosevelt bureaucracy, Roosevelt spending, increasing public payrolls and preventing the fullest expansion of private payrolls, are carrying us ever closer to conditions similar to those which produced dictatorships abroad. The rapid changes of experimental legislation threaten to create permanent unemployment because neither business nor individuals will go ahead. The only consistent Roosevelt idea—that business and public interest cannot go together—makes the vicious spiral of taxes and impeded recovery the more serious.

In this perambulation from party to party there will, of course, be other leaders. These five represent but the first signers of what is intended to be a declaration of independence from Rooseveltism. That declaration takes heart from the votes received by Colonel Breckinridge in the few primaries in which he tested out anti-Roosevelt sentiment. That sentiment expressed merely a choice of somebody else than Roosevelt within the Democratic ranks for leader. It did not measure the number of Democrats who, disliking Roosevelt and his policies, would actually leave the party.

Why do voters leave political parties with which they have been affiliated for years? The reasons may be many, but generally stem from fundamental beliefs or emotions that are affected by the course of an office-holder or candidate. Thus hundreds of thousands of Republicans, in state and national campaigns, left the Republican party because of prohibition. Many Republicans voted the Democratic ticket in 1916 because they hoped President Wilson would keep the nation out of war. Many Democrats voted for McKinley twenty years before because of free silver.

It is a fact stranger than fiction that Miss Crossman was present in Kansas City when Marion Talley made her first audition for a singing part. And the future opera star was only 14 at the time.

"With only a week for everything, I thought we couldn't begin too soon to get your acquainted. Of course, everyone who visits New Orleans wants to see the French quarter and dine or lunch in the famous French restaurants. So I'm taking you to the Patio Royal for lunch with some of the girls today. After you've met some men, there'll be no chance for a feminine conclave. In fact, I doubt if I'll be seeing you much after tonight, so I'm making the most of my little hour."

"Why, I'll be like lead on your hands before the end of the week," Lynn deprecated, but Dot's prophetic confidence gave her a thrill of pleasure.

They crossed the seething main artery of Canal Street with the traffic signal and crept into the contrasting narrow thoroughfare of Royal Street. And instantly, it seemed to Lynn as if they had entered a strange world. The streets were narrow and crowded, with people and buildings; the latter so old and so foreign in their architecture and elaborate decoration, and the people a strange conglomeration of negroes and whites. Rows and rows of balconies and window grilles made of iron lace, so delicate and fantastic that it looked unreal, adorned the quaint buildings, most of them three stories high. It must be some kind of fairyland into which they had entered suddenly. Like the fantastic decorations of ice crystals which so transformed northern cities sometimes on winter days, would this strange scene vanish at a magic gesture?

But it had not vanished when Dot parked the roadster at the crowded curb and led the way through one of those grilled Moorish doorways into a beautiful courtyard. They passed through the gloom of the stone-paved narrow entrance into the brilliant patio where little tables under bright awnings were surrounded by vivid flowers and the dense foliage of orange and banana trees. Their contrast with the weathered stone walls which surrounded the court was like the startling contrast of the old and the modern streets.

As they entered the patio, a group of girls near the splashing fountain signaled gayly and soon were greeting Lynn with warm cordiality. There were four of them, all attractive and well dressed and so sophisticated as any similar group of girls might be. But that which made them individual and unique to Lynn was the strangely charming accent of their speech, so much more emphasized when a group of them chattered together. It added considerably to the illusion of being in a strange land.

Dot's delightfully exotic accent and tone of voice had seemed so individual to Lynn, but now when she heard a half dozen of them sharing their words and dropping their g's and r's, it sounded almost as if they were speaking another language. How different they were from the harsh voices and hard staccato accents of the girls at Dunne's. And how far removed she was from that world, so vague and unreal in her memory, now. This was real; this enchanting old garden and the lulling fountain, the vivacious language of these girls who hadn't a care in all their warm, colorful existence.

"These four are the maids who will attend the queen of the carnival," Dot confided in a low voice. "But no one else will know until tomorrow."

one—yet." Her black eyes twinkled. "Perhaps—after tonight."

Lynn was amused at her insistence that this visit would involve romance. Everyone had intimated that same thing. Susanne had been so sure that Lynn would meet her fate during this one week of pleasure. Her conscience scoffed at the idea, at the same time it ventured ahead with a little wistful yearning. She thanked her departing relatives for their kindnesses and turned to her bags which had followed her up the stairs with Andy. She would change to a fresh blouse before going downtown with Dot.

As she arranged her toilet articles on one of the dressing tables and absorbed the luxurious comfort of her surroundings, she visioned her mother in that room more than twenty years before. She had left all this, willfully, to go into a strange city and a hostile climate to struggle with poverty for the man she loved! It must have been a very great love to have been strong enough for that. Lynn marvelled that any emotion could be so potent. Would she ever know such a love? Would there ever come into her life a man who could so change her entire destiny? She hoped that love might be like that for her—when it came, dominating and superceding all else.

But that experience must be very far away, now. She never had seen any man who even interested her. He would have to be so very different from anyone she knew now, to stir her deeply. And she was not so much concerned with that vague problem, either. Her present desire was to absorb enough gaiety and pleasure in one short week to glorify her memories for the many somber months ahead of her. She must learn to play. She never had played before. This was an opportunity which her mother would have wished for her, and she had to make the most of it.

Dot came in presently. She was ravishing in a suit of bottle-green crepe with a black fox scarf, from the depths of which her eyes glinted roughly in her little glowing face. She drew on fur-trimmed green suede gauntlets as they went downstairs.

"I'm half peeved with Jack for not comin' to lunch with us, today. He might have, just as well." Dot never conceded that any business conference might be more important than her desires. "But he's comin' here to dinner, tonight, before we go to the ball. And don't you think, darlin', that I've neglected you. I have a half dozen men for you to select from, all standin' on their ears in their eagerness to meet you. I've sung your praises from one end of this town to the other, so that the arrival of any mysterious princess never was awaited more anxiously."

"But you shouldn't have," Lynn protested, feeling frightened. She only had decided to emerge from her shell of reticence when she felt a warning to draw in her head again. "Well, you are a princess. Returned to your homeland," Dot insisted, "and a more stunning princess never lived. If I were as beautiful as you—" she deplored, leaving her intimations in vague silence, as she opened the door with a flourish.

Outside, an open roadster glinted in the sunshine, awaiting them. On its doors were the same crest and monogram which embellished Dot's stationery and other personal possessions. Yes, thought Lynn, Dot had everything, and yet she deplored that Lynn was more beautiful. What had her beauty commanded that Dot did not possess? It had not gained for her even one of her cousin's innumerable possessions and privileges and honors. Perhaps it never would.

"KING OF HEARTS"

BY EDNA ROBB WEBSTER

SYNOPSIS

Left destitute when her mother dies, Lynn Bartel is forced to leave private school and go to business. She becomes a mannequin for Dunning's, an exclusive Chicago dress shop. Lynn has very few friends as her training has placed her on a higher social level than her fellow-workers and her low financial status prevents her from associating with her own set. She has one friend, however, in Susanne, the stock girl, and she wished their tastes were more in common. All in all, Lynn's life was very lonely. Then one day, a letter comes from her wealthy and pampered cousin, "Dot," Mercheon, inviting Lynn to New Orleans for the Mardi Gras. With a light heart and an inexpensive wardrobe, Lynn goes south. She receives a hearty welcome from her Aunt Zola and "Dot." Lynn is given the room her mother had when a girl, and her heart overflows with gratitude and grief, grief because it was she, and not her mother, who returned to this lovely home after so many years' absence.

CHAPTER VIII

"We're goin' back to town for lunch, now," Dot informed her. "I'll give you time to freshen up a bit if you wish. You look perfectly grand as you are, but the stuffy old train always makes one feel so dishabille. If there is anything at all that you want, let us know, won't you? I'm so glad you're here," she added with happy emphasis.

"And I'm so glad to be here!" Lynn echoed, still gazing about the elegant room, as if she were trying to adjust herself to its strange familiarity. "How very beautiful it is!"

"Not half so beautiful as yourself," Dot admitted. "There isn't a more beautiful girl in this city, and few competitors even. I just adore that tricky little eyelash of yours, honey. How do you do it?"

"I don't. It just is, and always has been. When I was a little girl, I used to ask my mother if I was beginning to turn gray. I thought it was distinguished to have that touch of age," she laughed.

"It's preish as it can be, and so are you. Wait until the crowd sees you, darlin'. They'll fall on you like a pack of wolves—especially the men. They go big for a new girl."

"You frighten me," Lynn declared.

"Oh, they're quite harmless," Dot rolled her eyes with shy coquetry.

"Don't shock your cousin, child," Zola admonished her and took Lynn's hand fondly. "I'm so very happy that you came, dear. We have anticipated this for so long."

Lynn thought of her mother as she looked at her aunt, sitting there so confidently in that beautiful room. What a contrast to her sister's faded beauty and prematurely lined face was Zola's well-preserved youth and smart grooming. She appeared so little older than her daughter that they might easily have been sisters. The same lustrous hair and shining eyes, the same smooth complexion and elegant apparel. She yearned for her mother's lost youth and happiness, and wondered if her love had been worth that terrible price. If love did that to you, she was not so sure she wished to discover it.

Dot rambled on blithely, oblivious of the thoughts which crowded into her cousin's mind. "My room is next, with the bath between, as our mothers shared it. Come in any time at all, and ring for anything you want. The bell is here," indicating a wall button beside the bed, "and Lulu will do anything in the world for you. There's a telephone in the hall and one in my room, but I don't suppose you'll be callin' anyone—yet." Her black eyes twinkled. "Perhaps—after tonight."

Lynn was amused at her insistence that this visit would involve romance. Everyone had intimated that same thing. Susanne had been so sure that Lynn would meet her fate during this one week of pleasure. Her conscience scoffed at the idea, at the same time it ventured ahead with a little wistful yearning. ## BUY HUGE ESTATE FOR COUNTRY CLUB

Kessler Place of 55 Acres is Purchased by Broad Lawn
Gun and Country Club

EVERY SPORT BUT GOLF

WARRINGTON, July 2.—The fifty-five acre Kessler estate on the Lackawanna Trail at the foot of Warrington hill, one of the show places of Bucks county, has been sold to the Broad Lawn and Country Club, through the real estate offices of Mrs. Frances Pemberton Spencer, of Holicon.

Announcement of the sale was made today by the new owner, who has already taken possession, and who will turn the entire estate into what will be known as the Broadlawn Gun and Country Club, and conduct it along the lines of two similar clubs in the fashionable Westchester county section in New York.

A selected membership in the club is already being secured in the Philadelphia and nearby sections. Many professional and business men have been showing keen interest in the plans which have been in the making for some time.

Practically everything but golf will be played at the new club, and those who want to play golf will be accommodated, for the new club officials intend to contact the board of governors of the Doylestown Country Club to arrange for some type of golf privilege for visitors and members of Broadlawn Gun and Country Club.

Work on building the entire layout started today and within the next five weeks, the club will in all probability be ready for the formal opening.

No finer and more suitable location could have been found in Bucks county, the new owner told a newspaper representative yesterday. The natural setting is ideal for the type of club that will be developed.

The woods in the rear of the estate is being cleared and thinned and in it will be erected during the next few weeks a number of log-cabin type cabins for members of the club who desire to spend week-ends or any length of time at the place.

In the rear of the woods, will be erected a complete skeet shooting field, and in August of this year the Tri-State Championship Skeet Shooting matches will be staged there. It is also planned to have the qualifying skeet matches for the national championships held in Ohio, at the local club.

The spacious lawns on the estate will be turned into a beehive of activity within the next few weeks. On the south lawn, fronting on the Lackawanna Trail, steam shovels will be placed into service for the erection of a lake of close to three acres, in the rear of which will be a modern swimming pool, 160 and 200 feet in size, with a depth of three to twelve feet. The lake will be stocked with bass and trout. There will be modern bath houses erected in a section back of the pool, and not noticeable from the highway.

On the north lawn in front of the club house, will be built tennis courts, archery range and croquet courts.

The well built stone house will be entirely redecorated both inside and outside. There will be several additions to the house. There will be a ball room on the first floor on the north side of the house and a lounge and dining room on the south side of the first floor. On the second floor there will be billiard, pool and card rooms, and an office for the superintendent of the club.

A modern, up-to-date thimble bar will be built in the rear of the club house in a new addition that will be made by inclosing the side porch. This new section will lead out to the picturesque flower and rock gardens that have always made the Kessler estate one of the show places of Bucks county. The fish pond will be stocked with rare specimens.

Twelve riding horses will be brought to the club within the next few weeks and stabled in the fine old barn opposite the club house. In the future, the club officials expect to develop enough interest among the club members to ride to the hounds.

The large woods in the rear of the club will be stocked with pheasants and quail. Members of the club will have the privilege of two weeks' hunting in the deer and bear season at a private preserve owned by the club in Potter county.

A membership campaign is already under way. It is being conducted by one of the best known and most reliable firms in the East. Membership will be well selected but will not be exclusive to the extent that it will not be within reach of the average professional and business man and his family and friends.

The new club will be an all-year-around proposition. There will be skating in the Winter, as well as ski jumps, old fashioned sleighing parties, toboggan and the old Scotch curling games.

The new owners said yesterday they plan to secure a number of Doylestown residents to serve on the board of governors. The present initiation fee, it was explained, will be limited to a certain date after which it will be more than doubled.

Dinner dances will be held regularly at the club house. There will also be a complete amusement and recreation park for the kiddies built in the rear of the club house.

The Tri-State Skeet championships in August, to be held at the club, will be broadcast over a well-known radio hook-up, direct from the skeet range.

SERVE A PLEASING VARIETY OF FOOD COMBINATIONS

Dear Friends in the Bristol:

"Variety is the spice of life" and the interest of the family in foods depends on your ingenuity. Minerals and vitamins are important for body building, energy and repair. This combination will go a long way toward planning well balanced meals.

A delightful hostess of my acquaintance has made a food chart of combinations that are pleasing in variety. I am passing these suggestions on to you with the hope that you will find new delight in planning the family meals. Recipes will only be given for foods not to be found in the ordinary good cook-book.

To Serve With Beef

Accompaniment: Yorkshire Pudding, Horseradish Sauce, Mushroom gravy, Plum butter, Spiced grapes or Spiced apples.

Spiced grapes are prepared by first washing large bunches of seedless grapes. Place them in a quart jar but do not pack down as they will loosen from the stem. Pour over a highly spiced vinegar, boiling, the same as would be used for pickled peaches. Seal. These grapes look most attractive when served as a garnish for a roast of beef.

Vegetables: Spinach takes on interest when pressed into a ring mold, the center filled with potato balls and the border completed with hard cooked eggs in circles. Eggplant—stuff and serve in its shell. Dry grated cheese, mixed with the buttered bread crumbs gives a distinctive flavor. Macaroni—baked in custard cups and turn out on a chop plate. Garnish these with fresh tomatoes or baked tomatoes filled with a corn mixture. Squash, beans, beets, asparagus and boiled onions are good combinations.

To Serve With Steak

Accompaniment: Melted butter into which has been grated a very small amount of onion just before serving. Onion juice can also be served and this may be obtained by first grating the onion, then pressing the juice through cheese cloth. Mushroom sauce that is highly seasoned. The sauce should always be one of the brown sauces, the mushrooms are sautéed and added to the sauce just before serving. French fried potatoes and French fried onions are universal favorites.

French Fried Onions

Select a large onion of the white variety. Peel and cut into slices one-fourth inch thick. Separate slices into rings and soak in milk for half an hour. This will make the onion more delicate in flavor, also crisp. Drain off milk which may then be used for a sauce or cream soup, and dredge onion rings in flour. Fry in deep fat heated to 375 degrees F. or that will brown a cube of bread as you slowly count 70. A too hot fat will brown them quickly but they will not remain crisp. Drain on unglazed paper and salt just before serving.

To Serve With Roast Lamb

Accompaniments: Slice oranges one-fourth inch thick, leaving the peeling on. Place a tablespoon of currant jelly in the center. Use the orange slices as a border for the roast. Mint sauce is served from a sauce boat and made by heating vinegar, adding seasonings to taste and to each cup of vinegar used, two tablespoons of finely chopped fresh mint leaves are added when the vinegar is taken from the stove.

A boned leg of lamb stuffed with a mint dressing is somewhat different and tasty. Select a leg of lamb and have it boned at the market. Salt inside and out and stuff.

Mint Stuffing

To four cups of soft bread crumbs, add one-half teaspoon of sage, one teaspoon salt, one-eighth teaspoon of pepper, one tablespoon finely minced onion, one teaspoon baking powder, one egg slightly beaten, one-fourth cup melted shortening or butter. Mix well and add one-fourth cup chopped mint leaves.

Vegetables: Diced carrots and turnip balls, fluffy rice, green peas, paprika potato balls or mashed potatoes that have been well seasoned with salt, pepper and butter and finely chopped green pepper added.

To Serve With Roast Pork

Accompaniments: Apple croquettes, apple sauce, spiced crab apples or banana croquettes garnished with cranberry cubes.

Banana Croquettes

Remove skins from bananas, allowing two halves to each person. Cut in half, rounding at both ends. Sprinkle with lemon juice. Dip in flour, then in slightly beaten egg to which has been added two tablespoons of milk. Roll in fine bread crumbs. Allow to dry, dip and roll again. Fry in deep fat that has been heated to a temperature of 385 degrees F. Serve on platter with the pork.

Vegetables: Green cabbage, lima beans, corn on the cob, succotash, cauliflower that has been boiled whole and surrounded with finely shredded carrots also boiled in a small amount of water for five minutes then drained. Pour a butter sauce over all.

Appearance of Food

When the meal has been planned, it is always a good idea to picture mentally the finished product. This operation will prevent colorless meals or ones that conflict in color.

WINDOWS ARE FRAMED TO DEFY RISING TEMPERATURES

In days gone by, summer meant the complete dismantling of windows. Curtains were taken down and only the shade remained.

Today, windows are framed with cool, crisp curtains in colors that seem to bring a lowered temperature to the room. Arrange the drapes or curtains to allow all possible air to enter.

Venetian blinds give a graceful line to a window, keep the sun out, yet give perfect ventilation. For the summer house, it is possible to buy inexpensive Venetian blinds made of a heavy waxed paper. These are serviceable and will last throughout at least one season.

If you are putting summer drapes in your home, white is cooling. An unbleached material, trimmed with bias binding of three tones will allow you to carry out any color scheme. The first row of tape is placed on the edge, the next two rows one-half inch apart. Gingham curtains are inexpensive, and, as the entire home reflects informality during the hot months, these may be used from the living room to the kitchen. A gingham drape might be bordered with a pleated chintz ruffle for distinction, or trimmed with a cotton braid. Rough, loose weave linens hold their shape well and drape perfectly.

Cretone or chintz shades lend color to the room. These may be easily made at home. Purchase material the width of present shades, as this will give a salvage on both sides. Remove old shade from roller; also wooden strip at bottom. Hem material the same as shade, run the wooden strip through, make a hole for the curtain pull, and the new chintz shades are ready. A side over drape of a solid material completes the window.

BUILD YOURSELF A ROCK GARDEN

The idea of the rock garden came originally from the desire to recapture the beauty of mountain scenery.

The flowers to be found in rock crevices and clinging to almost barren slopes can be grown successfully in the smallest of gardens provided consideration is given to their natural tendencies. One positive principle to be rigidly adhered to in building a rock garden is that the soil must support the rocks and not the rocks the soil. Naturally the correct method is the most laborious but it is also the most satisfactory.

The stones or rocks used in the garden should be the natural ones of the locality. Use no cement but instead embed the rocks firmly in the soil with their most attractive sides protruding.

Simplicity in design and a knowledge of the true alpine plants will reward the amateur gardener.

Rocks in the garden are secondary and should be used sparingly. A rock garden should be, as near as possible, a replica of a true condition of nature. Allow ample room for the massing of plants and for their sustenance by the soil. Most alpine plants require a deep soil of not less than three feet, but not an especially rich one.

Know Your Plants

The plants to be used for a rock garden are of a distinct type. They are dwarf in form and compact of foliage. The types most generally used are from the mountains, lowlands, arid sections and from the woods. Most of the plants have small leaves and vivid flowers. It is best to start a rock garden with a few "tried and true" varieties and study their habits during the growing period. Another year the selection can be enlarged with more certainty as to success.

The following list is of the more common varieties that can be grown successfully by the beginner.

Evergreen, dwarf box, bunchberry, wintergreen, twin flower, flowering moss, Japanese yew, Gregory's dwarf, Norway spruce, rusty-leaved rhododendron.

Trees and shrubs selected for a rock garden must be of the low-growing type and compact in growth. Only a few varieties lend themselves to such a garden. Among them are: Japanese maple, dwarf mock orange, slender deutzia, Japanese azalea.

Perhaps the most interesting group of all is the perennials. These plants are admirably adapted to congested areas usually found in rockeries of today. It is often easier to seed plants in the rock crevices than to plant nursery grown stock.

A list of perennials would be: periwinkle, Stoke's aster, creeping phlox, moss pink, catmint, Kenilworth ivy, shooting star, Scotch pink, leadwort, mountain bluet, alpine rock cress,

American columbine, golden tuft, ball of snow.

SLIP COVERS TO FRESHEN THE HOME

Change Your Color Scheme for the Hot Months

The summer months call for cooling colors. Slip covers for chairs and upholstered pieces bring to your home just that effect.

Choose the covering for your furniture according to the style of your home and the use of the fabric. In the Colonial homes, flowered chintzes and blocked linens would be appropriate. Early American homes call for calicoes, plaids, checks, gingham, or historical prints.

In a room that has for a background a flowered wall paper, a slip cover should be either in a plain material or a stripe. A plain background in a room will be brightened with a large flowered cover, the smaller pieces of furniture taking likewise the smaller flowers.

If you are making the covers for your furniture at home, ask your merchant for an entire bolt of cloth. The part not used is returned when the job is completed. This enables you to measure and cut economically. Slip covers must fit. Patterns are procurable, but should be pinned on your furniture before any cutting is done. Pin material into shape. Seat cushions are covered separately, never as part of the back or front covering.

An opening is necessary. This opening may be snapped together, or many persons find it easier to use a "zipper."

Slip covers that have become faded by the sun may be dyed to freshen for another year's use. Measure before dyeing, then reshape to size while wet. Thus it is possible to prevent shrinking. Bias bindings of a different shade or color will then change the appearance of the cover, or a ball fringe may be used for certain types of furniture.

new roads, bridges, viaducts, good drainage systems; and the direction of this work is so well organized, that we could learn a lot from the examples set by Germany.

"The cost of gasoline is so high in Germany that they have developed a small, light car which gets 30 or 40 miles to the gallon. These cars are built for economy and are too small for the kind of comfort we are used to having. There are comparatively few automobiles.

Hamilton Hits New Deal In Speech at Columbus

ness, had no alternative but to copy it almost exactly, although his own record on these issues was as much in conflict with his new promises as with his former ones.

"The Republican platform does not insist on a balanced budget merely as a matter of dollars and cents. It does not propose encroachment to private business and removal of hampering restrictions merely in the interests of business men. Its proposals on these and other lines are dictated by the knowledge that uncertain and unpredictable policies in government mean uncertain and insecure lives for its citizens.

"The initiation of each costly New Deal experiment, the birth of every expensive white rabbit, have meant just this—that every worker must reassess the value of his pay envelope and the budget of his family. 'Taxes,' Governor Roosevelt proclaimed in 1932, 'are paid in the sweat of every man who labors.' Are they paid in some other way when they are levied by his own Administration?

"Behind each plank in the Republican platform lies this comprehension of the direct concern of the people with the affairs of government. And behind them also is a constructive spirit, not merely an attempt at justification.

"The platform written and adopted at Cleveland aimed at solving the problems that confront the nation.

"The platform written in Washington and adopted at Philadelphia seeks chiefly to hypnotize the voters into returning a particular political individual and his clique to power.

"There is no confidence shown by Mr. Roosevelt's document in the ability of the citizens to solve their own problems. Everyone is invited to look to government, to the Roosevelt Administration and particularly to Mr. Roosevelt himself.

"The Republican platform chooses rather to challenge and to mobilize the self-reliance that has, for 150 years, in every generation, built and rebuilt America. It insists that Government must keep open the door of opportunity, it recognizes a broad field within which government regulation is both needed and salutary. But it realizes that the future of a free nation depends primarily, not on the activities of its government, but on the character and efforts of its people.

"We have no need to doubt of the support that is being accorded our party, re-created so dramatically at Cleveland by the force of public opinion.

"Within the first week after the close of our convention, thousands of letters poured into national headquarters every day, approving our platform and endorsing the courageous leadership of our candidate. And more letters are being received in increasing quantities.

"Nor need we worry for lack of campaign funds, for these, like our support, are being provided by the whole body of voters. During the last three weeks, thousands of envelopes containing one dollar each reached the treasurer of the National Committee. Contributions, that were unsolicited, were accompanied by letters which eloquently tell the story of the interest of citizens everywhere, that what has been known as the New Deal must be replaced with coherent and competent government.

"For many weeks before the convention met, the nation had had the opportunity to examine the record and the qualifications for high office of the Governor of Kansas. It had also heard him speak, clearly and definitely, his opinions on the major questions now at issue. He does not seek to divide men into classes for, like the majority of our citizens, he does not admit the existence, in this country, of the foreign creed of class.

"Calmly and soberly, Governor Landon has told the nation what he believed it needed most—the restoration of confidence, the preservation of equality of opportunity and the return of competent administration in the field of government.

"There is in Governor Landon a driving force of character that has carried him from a humble worker in the oil fields to the leadership of a great party; a strength of will that held him, in the emergency in 1932 when he first took office as Governor of Kansas, to the pledges he made as candidate for governor; and a high courage that could hold the honor of a nomination for the presidency of less importance than his own honest convictions and beliefs.

"With a reunited party, with a realistic platform, with support daily increasing from all groups of citizens and with a candidate of the calibre of Governor Landon, we can enter this campaign with confidence."

Never Use Fresh Pineapple in Gelatin

There is an enzyme in fresh pineapple that will digest gelatin as fast as it is added to the mixture. It may stiffen at first, but will liquefy again on standing. Canned pineapple may be used without any difficulty.

Wax on Linoleum

Wax the linoleum in your home as often as you wax the floors. The wax protects the fibre, also prevents staining when liquids are spilled. Also a waxed floor is much easier to keep clean.

Relishes and Cheese

Relishes add color and distinction to the table and the food. Relishes should always be cold. If possible serve on a relish dish with its divided compartments. If one of these is not possible, place pickles, jellies, spiced fruits, olives, on a large platter in cups of lettuce. Stuffed olives are preferred as there is no need to dispose of.

As a variety of meats is more appetizing, the same is true of cheese. Guests delight in choosing their cheese. Wooden boards with a knife are ideal for this service. Cheese may be had in flavors of mellow American cheese, Swiss cheese, Pimiento, Olive-Cream, or Roquefort. The accompaniment to cheese must be crackers. Toast or heat crackers to assure their crispness.

Preparing Cauliflower

When soaking broccoli or cauliflower before cooking, immerse and let stand head down in cold water. Do not add salt for in this manner the insects are killed but remain in the vegetable.

The voyage from Frankfurt-on-Main, Germany, the dirigible's fourth trip to the United States since beginning a trans-Atlantic air service, took fifty hours and thirty-four minutes. The previous westward time, fifty-nine hours and fifty minutes, was set on the ship's last crossing. Taking a new inbound route over Canada, the dirigible passed over Quebec and Montreal last evening, and soared over Albany, New York, at 12.42 a. m. today. The zeppelin carried twenty-one passengers.

Three Men Long Associated With Building Buicks

Into Buick engineering development three men have put the best parts of their lives in the 33 years of the company's existence.

For the fourth man to take up the task, President H. H. Curtice has chosen one who has for more than six years shared in the development of the Buick product to its present high reputation in the automobile world. He is Charles A. Chayne, new chief engineer of the Buick Motor Company, successor to Walter L. Marr, E. A. DeWaters and Ferdinand A. Bower.

This progression of engineering leadership has been strengthened by overlapping experience of its members and tested by adherence to the fundamentals that have always been the foundation stones upon which Buick has built its mechanical structure.

The history of this company has a most interesting story of engineers. It begins in 1903 when Walter Marr drove David Buick in the first Buick car, from Detroit to Flint to bring into being the Buick Motor Company. Mr. Marr and Mr. Buick covered 115 miles on that trip and every mile was an experience. Dies and patterns were placed in the small shop of the Flint Wagon Works and the two concerns merged to start automobile manufacturing.

The car in which Buick's first chief engineer drove to Flint was a far cry from the youthful zest of the 1936 product which is making such a sensational showing. But they had at least one thing in common—a valve-in-head motor.

Mr. Marr clung to the valve-in-head principle throughout his career. He is credited with having coined the name following a test with his two-cylinder car in which he set a record. Asked how his small car could defeat the larger and higher-powered cars entered in the race, he replied: "It's the valve-in-the-head motor." The phrase stuck.

In 1905, the year that Buick produced 750 cars, E. A. DeWaters joined the engineering staff. Four years later Mr. Bower, then and still called "Dutch," came into the organization as engineer in the axle plant of the Weston-Mott Company.

In these years were engineered the torque tube drive, the sealed chassis, the rugged frame and other fundamentals that have stood the test of time and remain the foundation of Buick's mechanical structure.

Trained under their chief engineer, Mr. Marr, both Mr. DeWaters and Mr. Bower could not fail to absorb that spirit of devotion to task and principle upon which Buick's mechanical and adding such refinements as they progress has been founded. Any of the three will testify that real life blood went into the job. There was little time for regard for health, regularity of living or recreation. Engineering advancement laid down heavy demands.

Years before Mr. Marr retired from active service, Mr. DeWaters helped carry the load for him. Gradually the newer man took over the task until in 1918, he assumed the title of chief engineer.

Mr. Bower became chief engineer in 1930, but he too had already become a veteran at the post. The closed car, sliding gear transmission, four, six and eight cylinder engines, the self-starter, four-wheel brakes, synchromesh transmission, knee-action, all were developed during these later years and accepted into the Buick engineering fold.

The 40 series came into the picture in 1933 to bring Buick into a new volume market. With it came new standards to be met by the engineers. It had to be lower priced, yet retain the product's reputation for dependability.

Year after year Buick engineers have improved upon the product, retaining all the fundamental features principle that Buick reputation was built. Following the tremendous task of bringing out the 1936 models, Mr. Bower found his work taxing his physical strength. Six months ago the condition of his health forced him to leave his post, and finally to take indefinite leave of absence.

For 27 years years Mr. Bower held to the formula once given him by his first chief: "If you know the thing is right, stick with it." It was on this

"My husband, Robert Whaley, was insured in the Industrial under policy No. 290112 and in the State Mutual under certificate No. 12585, each contract being issued February 2, 1920, for $224 Death Benefits.

He died on June 17, 1935. I reported the death to your office today, June 22nd, and LESS THAN ONE HOUR later I received two checks in full settlement of each contract.

I wish to thank you for the prompt way in which you settled my claim and will gladly recommend your companies to anyone desiring life insurance.

PHILLIES' BEST TEAM COMING TO PLAY HERE

After a lapse of several years, another big league team is coming to Bristol to meet a local team.

Monday night, Jimmy Wilson will bring his first string players of the Phillies Club of the National League to play Dave Landreth's team on the Landreth diamond. The last major league team present here was the Athletics who played the Knights of Columbus team on the same diamond.

Wilson has promised Landreth that he will have his best team here for the localites to witness. This means that Pinky Whitney who has been chosen by the baseball fans of the country to play third base in the "Dream Game" at Boston, will be at the hot corner in the tilt and the fans will have the pleasure of seeing one of the best third-sackers in the game play that night.

"Chuck" Klein, hard-hitting right-fielder, will also be here and give an exhibition of long distance clouting. Klein several years back led the National League in home-run clouting and was among the first five in his batting average. Klein has one of the best throwing arms in the National circuit and when the season's averages are listed, the Phillies' outfielder is high among those outfielders credited with assists.

Manager Dave Landreth is priming his boys for the tilt. He will hold several practice sessions this week and feels confident that his proteges will put up a good contest.

LANDRETHS' LOSE TO BLACK METEORS, 5 TO 4

The Landreth Seeds were defeated last night by the Black Meteors of Philadelphia, a fast colored team, 5-4. The visitors won the game in the last inning, squeezing over the deciding tally. Kane's hit and two bases on balls loaded the sacks, then Baylor's long fly to centre field allowed the score.

The Seeds played a poor game afield, making six errors, five of them being bad throws and three coming in the opening inning when the visitors tallied three runs.

A wild throw by Malmesbury and two infield outs gave them a run in the fifth frame.

The "Farmers" scored in the fourth on Broderick's hit and steal and Hefman's single to centrefield.

Three runs were made in the fifth when they put on a batting rally. Hines, Rockhill, Malmesbury and Dougherty making consecutive hits. Sadler, the visitors' shortstop, stopped the rally after the score was tied by a wonderful catch of Hefman's fly back of second base.

The visitors made but six hits off of Hines' pitching, one each in the fourth, eighth and ninth and three in the first—one being a scratch single.

A wild heave by Malmesbury and two infield outs was the other visitors' tally in the fifth inning.

Star Olympic Dash Aspirants in Finals

The premier 100-meter dash men of the country are set to try conclusions with each other for places on the U. S. Olympic team at Randalls Island, New York. ## LOVELOCK WILL ATTAIN PEAK FOR OLYMPICS

By Howard Berry
L. N. S. Staff Correspondent

LONDON, July 2 (INS)—American track stars—and others as well—competing in the Olympic Games at Berlin this summer will have to watch out for fleeting Jack Lovelock, popular British track star of Mile of the Century fame.

Despite the loss of the British Amateur Athletic association mile championship to the British runner, S. A. Wooderson, last year, another defeat in the Scottish champions at Glasgow shortly afterwards, and a dismal display in London last month Jack Lovelock is not on the decline.

Behind Lovelock's lack of success during the past 12 months is a story which would help to stop the croakings of some of the experts.

Very Tired

First of all, Lovelock is tired, very tired. After he was beaten into third place in a mile race this year, he told International News he was so weary that he nearly dropped out halfway.

But Lovelock is a man of two conflicting ambitions. There is that ambition to win the 1,500 meters at Berlin, and there is another to be a big success as a doctor.

For months one has been pulling against the other. Lovelock has had the choice of thrilling the healthy masses, or curing the ailing masses.

He chose the latter—but it may well have cost him his chance of sealing a great career with a world crown.

"I don't make excuses whenever I am beaten," Lovelock told International News, "and I always try my level best to win. The truth is that I have been working now for nine months without a vacation. Sometimes I am up all night."

Work Comes First

"It is not exactly the best existence for training, but I have no interest in running at the moment. My work must come first. You can tell America, all my friends over there, and every one who has taken such a kind interest in me, not to worry. I don't worry. When the time comes I will be there in my best form."

"Soon I shall go for a good vacation. I need a long rest and that is what I am going to have. Then, perhaps, I shall feel more confident to work myself up to concert pitch for the Olympic Games, and perhaps a meeting with my old friend, Bill Bonbrun."

Lovelock has just finished the maternity course of his medical training and this has meant night's rest broken on and hours continually on the go. That the British runner has not set tracks alight with those astonishing times that made him famous can hardly be wondered at.

And although Lovelock will have a great task in the Olympic Games, he says he will be in condition and he is confident, and a confident Lovelock in a mile makes a world of difference.

LANDRETHS PLAY HERE SUNDAY

Sunday at Landreth Baseball Park the Landreth's Seeds will meet Holmesburg, last year's champions of the Quaker City League. Prodel or Grindel will pitch for the visitors, while Sullivan or Prall will do the pitching for the "Farmers." The game will start at 3 o'clock.
